Detention Procedures

Elementary

Noon Hour

Students are not to be kept in the classroom during the noon hour and denied lunch. Under unusual circumstances, a student may be detained for 10 minutes and then dismissed for lunch. Students may occasionally be required to report back to the classroom after they finish lunch, to complete any unfinished assignments.

Recess

It is considered poor practice to habitually keep children in at recess. But at times, it might be necessary for a student to stay in for special guidance or to make up work. However, except under unusual circumstances, entire classes shouldn't be kept in all at the same time.

After School

At this point in the day it is vital that parents know where their children are, and under whose supervision. Therefore, if it becomes necessary for a student to be kept after school, the teacher must make arrangements with the parents and have their consent. If the parent cannot be reached or does not give his/her consent, the student must be sent home. At this point, other arrangements can be made to give the student special help or guidance, either at noon, recess, or after school another day.

Junior/Senior High

Students will bring reading materials or other classroom assignments to work on.

The school is not responsible for transportation home following detention. Students must arrange for their own transportation home.
